

Designed in the early 1950s as a universal military transport, the Hercules C-130 has proven to be a quite remarkable "jack of all trades." Operated by more than 70 different countries' air arms and still in production after 60 years, the Hercules is the most widely used military aircraft in history. Of particular value in limited war situations such as Vietnam and Afghanistan, the C-130 is one of the first aircraft to appear in any conflict situation. It is seen here in typical "in trail" mode as flown by U.S. forces in recent conflicts.
